[Living in the city - urban apartment building]

In today's world, most of life takes place in cities. Due to the resulting housing shortage, urban living is an issue that affects all population groups. New and progressive housing models in new development, stacking, redensification and residential overbuilding are helping to make contemporary and ecological living possible.

Using 70 projects, this book shows how urban housing stock is significantly improved and a positive urban environment is created. It presents numerous aesthetically sophisticated residential buildings from Germany, Austria and Switzerland in detailed texts and with numerous large-format illustrations. Thus it shows the possibilities for urban living to the broad public in an appealing way. On the other hand, the fact-rich texts and detailed plans also appeal to architects.
