Hochschulen - Bauten für die berufliche und Erwachsenenbildung

Germany, Austria, Switzerland

The field of architecture for adult and vocational education ranges from new buildings for training programs that did not exist decades ago to the expansion of universities that have been growing since the early modern period. As society, research, and professional profiles continue to differentiate, these buildings need to change. Extensive renovations and energy upgrades are required. At the same time, the buildings must be functional and provide adequate space for learning and teaching. Architects face the challenge of accommodating different subjects with different needs in the same building. This volume includes classroom and seminar buildings, architecture with lecture halls, and many other specific buildings for teaching. It is a follow-up to the two books already published on educational buildings, on kindergartens and schools.
